Scandinavian Resources continues to expand their drilling program

mars 30th, 2011

Australian exploration company Scandinavian Resources have been active in Sweden for three years and are currently working on their drilling program for iron, gold and copper in the Kiruna area in north Sweden. The Swedish HQ is based in Malå and Chairman of the company Daiman Hicks considers Malå the ideal location for the company.

"Here you have the knowledge and the large drill core archive, Malå is world class! Plus Sweden feels like a safe country for exploration and investments," mr. Hicks says. "We take on the role of being guests in this country, we are here with the ambition to build on what others have done before us and develop it further. Of course we want to see the company grow and provide more jobs to the region. We also value our relationships with the sami community, local businesses and other actors in our vicinity. While we keep ourselves updated with all that's going on all over the world, and how the global events effect us we want to keep our focus on what we have at stake here; creating grow and development."
